HAIR NETS ARE A NECESSITY

Use of Electric Curlers Makes Hair Permanent.

Hair nets have changed hair dressing in the last two years. Hair braiding is no longer in style. The pretty ribbon that was once a decoration as well as a necessity has disappeared.

The kodak pictures that were taken a few years ago without the hair net are stored away in the trunk with other relics of by-gone days. Electric curling irons have become a fad for girls in schools and colleges. This has made it necessary to use the hair net.

The hair net is not new. It has been in use for twenty years. It has been a fad since the war. It is one fad that may have come to stay, because it makes it much easier to dress the hair, and keeps the flowing locks in their proper place.

Deveraux Has Built Up One of Best American Stock Companies

"I like Columbia and have several friends here, so I decided to bring my company here to rehearse instead of taking them back to New York," Mr. Clifford Deveraux told an Evening Missourian reporter with a smile, which at once explained his success on the stage and as a theatrical manager.

Mr. Deveraux has made arrangements to train his company of fourteen people here for three weeks, preparatory to opening the summer tour at Kirksville. His story of building up from a makeshift group a theatrical troupe which is today the premier company playing college and university towns is full of real glimpses behind the curtains.

"I didn't start the company with a view of making it a permanent thing," he said with an eager enthusiasm which marks his discussion of the stage and stage matters. "I had been with Southern and Marlowe troupe and a few friends of mine and we put on Shakespeare for a few weeks close to New York. It was a bigger success than I had expected."

"That was ten years ago. For several years I went out each summer during the slack season with such a troupe, and five years ago I decided to keep a troupe out all year, playing the university and college towns. I have found that there is a big demand for higher class plays in educational centers.

"Where do I get my talent? New York City, mostly. Of course that is the heart of the theatrical world, and you can get any kind of actors and actresses walking the streets of New York out of a job. We have a New York office and generally can get just the people we need. The war caused a trouble, of course. It not only hurt the business but took many of my men. Four of my present cast are former service men."

Mr. Deveraux admitted that he had tried to get in the Navy and then had been drafted the very day the armistice was signed.

"We will be here about three weeks," he continued, "and will rehearse two new plays, Bulwer-Lytton's 'Richelieu' and 'The Taming of the Shrew.' This will make six plays in our repertoire for this summer. I hope that we can give two or three plays while we are in Columbia."

The Deveraux Players, as the company is called, is now the leading theatrical troupe of its kind in the field. At one time it had the competition of the Ben Greet Players and the Coburn Players. But now Ben Greet has returned to England, and Coburn made a fortune in his play, "The Better Ole," and has retired for the time being. The personnel of the troupe will be changed somewhat while rehearsing here, as more talent is coming out to join the company from New York City. The company itself will arrive in Columbia Sunday.
